Headmaster's Corner

It's a new year, a good time to renew our commitment to do all we can as parents and teachers to strengthen support for our students' success. Think of your family evenings and weekends. Ask yourself how you can incorporate more reading and more math into those times. Maybe the tv has to be turned off longer or the ipads, cell phones, and computers shut down.

Is the family playing at least one math game each weekend?

Is your student reading to you every day and night and are you reading to your student every day and night.

Commit. Persevere. The learning will happen if you do!

I assure you our faculty are committed. We are doing our best to promote learning success in each of our students. If your student is not making the kind of progress you think should be made, do not hesitate. Meet with your student's teacher and brainstorm ways to increase success.

We are partners (and proud to be partnering with you) in this noble mission of forming hearts and minds in virtue and truth.
