

Golden Eagle E- Blast January 21, 2021

Rainy Days

On rainy days, please consider sending your student to school with a hooded jacket or hat rather than with an umbrella. This week Archway Glendale faculty noticed that the use of umbrellas slowed the morning drop-off down considerably. Most students do not have far to walk to get from their vehicle to the door. In addition, when it is raining, students go straight to classroom not outside.

Headmaster Corner

This school year I have been writing to our families about the foundational strength of the virtue of trust within our school, our families, and all human institutions. I am encouraging all of us to commit ourselves to practicing the 13 high-trust behaviors.

Talk straight, demonstrate respect, create transparency, right wrongs, and show loyalty are the first five high-trust behaviors. Deliver results is #6.

If you commit to the first five and practice them consistently, you will have set yourself up for success. Another way to think of “deliver results” is “actions speak louder than words.” Establish a track record of results. Do the right things and do them on time. Do not over-promise and under deliver. As we say in Missouri (where I come from) “Show me!”

No excuses; no blaming; your family members need to hold each other accountable for delivering great results consistently. Have confidence in your abilities and the help of your family. At the same time humbly know your limitations, get the help you need (you are not alone), and work as hard, effectively, and efficiently as you can!

Make good things happen! You can do it! Deliver results, the very best results you can.
