“Strictly speaking, Socratic discussion is about the most important humane and philosophical topics: it is about moral virtue, political philosophy, and the nature of knowledge, the essence of art, etc. At Great Hearts, you will see this kind of Socratic discussion often in Literature,” explains Great Hearts Co-founder, Dan Scoggin.

At Archway Glendale, students begin Socratic discussion through the seminar of great books. These discussions begin in kindergarten with readings such as Van in a Jam. Kindergarten students participate in ‘round table’ readings to help them on their way to the understanding of humane studies.

Truly, it is because of your gifts to Community Investment that Archway Glendale is able to introduce students to the rich literature of the Western canon through seminars. Your participation in Community Investment supports Literature and Composition at Archway Glendale. You are invited to invest in this great work! Headmaster Corner

Dear Archway Glendale Families,

One of our deepest and strongest roots that makes our school so healthy and successful is our incredibly supportive, loving, respectful family community. We are blessed with parents that value a classical education as demonstrated through instilling a love of learning, building a sense of wonder for the beautiful world around us, helping with homework, incorporating reading into the family daily schedule, supporting the school with disciplinary measures, respectfully communicating with the school, attending conferences and meetings with a spirit of goodwill and partnership, committing to getting to school on time, and sharing of time and treasure. We simply would not have the culture we do at Archway Glendale without the continual support of our families.

We are looking forward to re-enrollment being back in person next week. We cannot wait to see every single one of our families in person as we commit to partnering for another year together!

In gratitude,
